Speakers: Dr. David Stoddard, Dr. Al Pokorny, Dr. Rod Tataryn

Despite extensive scientific recognition and high prevalence, dental infection manifesting in the maxillary sinus continues to remain under-appreciated, are frequently overlooked in medical and dental practice, and often misdiagnosed as rhinogenic sinusitis. This lecture explains the anatomy and function of the paranasal sinuses, sinus disease, and etiologies for odontogenic sinusitis with associated clinical and radiographic findings. The goal is to help practitioners recognize odontogenic sinusitis in daily practice and offer appropriate care and specialist collaboration when indicated in order to improve the health of their patients suffering with this condition.
